Monografía

Danish architect Carsten Lorenzen has a wealth of experience in the field of residential architecture--ranging from subsidized housing to private complexes, from the conception phase to the execution of details. This first monograph on Lorenzen presents some 25 projects and ideas that have been planned or constructed since 1996. Only a few notable architectural firms are specialized in residential architecture. Carsten Lorenzen (* 1953 in Tnder) has a wealth of experience ranging from subsidized housing to private complexes, from the conception phase to the execution of details. The use of brick gives his buildings a striking, haptic quality. Working with exposed stonework is an involved process that requires precise planning and an exact knowledge of the stonemasons craft. A sensitive design of intimate interiors within densely built settlements and subtle transitions between public and private space are other definitive aspects of the architects work, which draws its inspiration from Nordic housing and leading figures such as Arne Jacobsen and Kay Fisker. This first monograph presents some 25 projects and ideas that have been planned or constructed since 1996. Essays describe the special challenges posed by brick construction, the quality of Lorenzens floor plans, and the architects relationship to Copenhagen
