-Well blow, daughter, blow. On a day-to-day basis, the youngest have to face challenges that for them appear to insuperable, although adults see them as trivial; in this case, the soup at an impossible temperature. Overcoming these challenges forms part of a natural process in learning and growth, where the imagination becomes the most efficient resource to which the child has access, as Pablo Albo suggests in this enriched story with the expressive purpose and the formal balance with the illustrations by André Letria. The Portuguese illustrator using acrylic on paper characterizes with great effect the presence of close-ups, to bring together a series of images of notable chromatic bearing in a characteristic figurative proposal over predominant flat backgrounds.
