Arnold Golay, 91, a former watchmaker who once had learned to make a timepiece entirely by hand. This know-how has always stood him in good stead. Upon retirement, Golay became a full-time toy maker. Even as a watchmaker, he used to make toys for his own children. The film follows his steps as he builds a toy handcart, from raw wood to finished product. We also see his collection of toys, which are reduced-scale models of all the carts, wheel barrows, and other implements used on the farm before the invention of the tractor
