It is urgent and necessary to take advantage of all public and private spaces available to women to report, tell, inform and demand structural changes and relationship patterns that expose us to situations of inequality and therefore vulnerability to different manifestations of violence. On the streets, at home, at work, in the lyrics and in the audience, we say: Women are not vulnerable, inequality makes us vulnerable, for this reason, it is necessary to analyze in detail the different ways in which inequalities operate, and it is fundamental to focus on that differential overlapping, which occurs between patriarchy, capitalism and colonialism
