Analítica

An artistic work comprehension can be understood as the assimilation of a continuous dialogue between two (2) temporalities: that which the work possesses itself, as opposed to the temporality of the viewer who observes it. This assimilation process defines the meaning of an artistic representation at a given moment in history. Under this principle, the visual analysis of "Creación de las aves" (1957) work, by the artist Re-medios Varo, is presented below. The exercise focuses his interest in defining various levels of significance of the work, through the Erwin Panofsky and Didi-Huberman proposal, from whom the value of historical anachronism, as a model for understanding an image stopped in time, is retaken
