Analítica

This article analyzes two central factors from the conditions of possibility of State terror executed by the Argentine Armed Forces during the decade of the seventies: the construction of a state of exception and the development of a doctrine of "antisubversive war". In the first place, it explores the situation of legal exceptionality created by the national State is explored through a serie of laws and decrees of defense and internal security from the sixties to 1975. Secondly, it studies the doctrine of "antisubversive war" developed by the Army, the main weapon in charge of clandestine repression, based on the crimes that it might even allow in the framework of alleged combat actions. The objective of this article is to investigate the porous limits between legality and illegality in defense policy and counterinsurgency doctrine, in order to restore the military rationality that enabled the implementation of state terror
