"Selections from the Writings of 'Abdu'l-Bahá" by 'Abdu'l-Bahá is a collection of spiritual and philosophical essays likely penned in the early 20th century. This work comprises a range of teachings and reflections that call for unity, love, and the promotion of peace among all people. The writings serve as a guide, encouraging readers to embody the principles of harmony and service in their daily lives. The opening of this collection introduces fundamental themes of love, unity, and the importance of spiritual awakening amidst the turmoil of the world. It eloquently emphasizes the necessity for all individuals to recognize their interconnectedness as part of a single human family, urging them to act with compassion and to aid one another, regardless of past differences. In this opening portion, the author depicts the prevalent conflicts of humanity and calls upon the readers to rise above animosities, inspiring a transformation through acts of kindness and understanding rooted in divine love.
