Bahá'í Faith

Monografía

"Tablets of Abdul-Baha Abbas" by Abdu'l-Bahá is a collection of spiritual writings and correspondence that serves as key texts in the Bahá'í Faith, likely compiled in the early 20th century. This work encompasses the teachings and exhortations of Abdu'l-Bahá, who was the son of Bahá'u'lláh, the founder of the Bahá'í Faith, providing guidance and inspiration to his followers. The themes of unity, love, and service to humanity are prevalent, emphasizing the importance of adhering to the principles of God and promoting a global brotherhood. The opening portion introduces the compilation's purpose, highlighting the collection of letters or "Tablets" addressed to the Bahá'ís, particularly those in America, encouraging them to uphold their faith and engage in community service. It discusses the importance of these texts for spiritual nourishment and guidance among adherents. The writings convey a deep sense of connection to the Divine, urging readers to seek unity and harmony while disseminating the teachings of Bahá'u'lláh. This introduction sets the stage for the subsequent tablets, each filled with spiritual insights and divine instructions meant to strengthen the Bahá'í community and inspire further devotion.
